I have a (UI) application using a WPF windows. In this application I have a long running task to read and process a file (50 MB) I have to start this task in the UI-Thread of the application. Because this file is part of a big batch file. the UI is showing a spinning wait-icon, because the task is not finished. I have to stop this blocking of my UI by showing a progressbar. I already tried to activate the progressbar in every single task by implementing the Notify Property within the Task Class. A: If you are binding the progress bar to a property in the current thread, use the Binding.UpdateSourceTrigger Property and set it to PropertyChanged. Binding b = new Binding("BindingData"); b.UpdateSourceTrigger = PropertyChanged; ProgressBar.SetBinding(ProgressBar.Progress, b); Is your UI thread code inside the constructor? It won't automatically run in the background thread. You need to use Task.Run to run the task in another thread. private void mainWindow_Loaded(object sender, RoutedEventArgs e) { string file = "C:/Program Files/blah blah"; Task.Run(() => ReadFile(file)); } private void ReadFile(string file) { // The following code should be inside the task // The "file" is the argument to the task Task.Run(() => { Task.Factory.StartNew(() => { // Do something... }); }); } Q: Most efficient order for marking specific posts as not spam in EE I want to be able to mark certain posts (specific post categories) as "not spam" so that they don't get added to the spam feed.
